

Loan Information for the Travelling Exhibition Sh'erit Ha-Pletah – The Surviving Remnant

Shortly after the Second World War, Föhrenwald became one of the largest and the longest-running camp for Jewish displaced persons (DPs) in Europe. Jews who had lost their homes during the Shoah waited here for their departure to Israel or hoped to start a new life in another country. They described themselves as "She'erit Hapletah", in English "The Surviving Remnant".

The Föhrenwald DP camp was the last "shtetl" in Europe. After the end of the war the Jewish DPs built up an autonomous community with a multi-layered infrastructure under UN-administration. The American-Jewish aid organisation JOINT built kindergartens, schools, sports, and training facilities. There was a cinema, a theatre, a hospital, and even its own camp newspaper. Over the course of twelve years thousands of people lived in this enclave of Jewish life, largely sheltered from the outside world. The last DPs had to leave the camp in February 1957.

The exhibition details the many different facets of life in the DP camp.

The BADEHAUS Place of Remembrance

Starting in 1939/40, the National Socialists built a model settlement for workers in the arms industry in the forest of Wolfratshausen. At the close of World War II, the concentration camp death march passed through the area. Thereafter, Föhrenwald was transformed into a camp for Jewish displaced persons who had survived the Holocaust. From 1956, the camp became the new home mainly for Catholic expellees with large number of children. The place was renamed into Waldram. Until today, traces of this unique history of migration can be found here. This history is told in the BADEHAUS Place of Remembrance.

The association Verein Bürger fürs BADEHAUS Waldram-Föhrenwald e.V. saved the former men's bath for workers in the arms industry, which later became the Jewish ritual bath (mikvah), from demolition and turned it into a Place of Remembrance, of encounters and of learning. A team of volunteers runs the museum, develops special exhibitions and organises monthly events.
